40 years old!

Barely 40 inches separate these two Range Rovers but what really separates them is 40 years of development. Launched in the summer of 1970 the Range Rover was a giant leap forward for the Land Rover company from its utilitarian Series vehicles of the day.

At the time of its launch it contained some very progressive features such as dual line brakes, recessed door handles, and a collapsible steering column. Selling for approx £2000 the publicity showed it as a vehicle for use around the farm by day and then scrubbed out to be used to go to the theatre in the evening. By 1978 the Range Rover was selling for over £9000 and already it had changed into the car to be seen in 'around town'. Four doors and several variations later we have today's Range Rover, a far cry from the first model of 40 years ago.

The birthday of the Range Rover was recently celebrated at the Heritage Motor Museum at Gaydon. There were some very early pre-production vehicles like the one above, some early press photo cars and almost every variation of the Range Rover was represented.

Land Rover is pinning its future hopes on the Range Rover too. Its new Hybrid powered LRX vehicle will be launched under the Range Rover badge.

Simon Says

Lord Baden Powell, founder of the scout movement unfortunately died before Land Rovers were first made. However, you can bet your woggle and roast Arkela over the camp fire that his vehicle of choice would have been a Land Rover. Rugged, go anywhere, do anything, load it with 6 boy scouts and still have room for more.

But Baden Powell would have remembered his motto - "Be Prepared". There's no point in waiting until your Land Rover fails when a little preventative maintenance will go a long way towards stopping it failing at the critical moment. So "be prepared" yourself and make sure your Land Rover is in tip top condition and take advantage of one of this month's special offers or if you're into DIY servicing
